disappearing in 1809 before American ideas of progress. With no paved streets, no waterworks, no street lights, no steam whistles, no phonographs, no living picture shows and nothing modern to excite it during the day, the town snuffed out its tallow candles soon after dark and went to sleep. It seldom grew as much excited about anything whatever, as it now does every day on Broadway during the baseball season when the score is being builetined. It moulded an extra pound or so of bullets when it was roused by reports of what the British and Indians might do, but usually it was not ensity excited about Indians of anything else. Its own agency Indians often thronged the streets and if they had only the furs which came near taking the place of money altogether. taking the place of money altogether, in the whole business of the place. The in the whole business of the place. The greatest business excitement was seen when some one caught the noise of songs and shouting as a fleet of keel-boats and canoes returned from the Missouri or the Arkansas after six months or more of trading. The rush for the river front then might have suggested the modern interest in a base-ball score, but there was nothing else approaching it.

ness in them can start it to working out into world history.

PORTOLA F

As in 1800 St. Louis had less than 200 houses, it is not easy to understand now how its leading citizens could meet on the corners of its only two thoroughfares and discuss it then as one of the most important towns in the country. This some of them certainly did. They left the record of their prophecies, to be read now when in the last ten years about half a million more people have come into the United States across the Atlantic than the total of them in St. Louis a hundred years sirst incorporated. With not quite seven hand a quarter million people in the United States, and not quite a thousand of them in St. Louis a hundred years sigo, they were certainly the most important people in the world then. Even then the world suspected it. It was almost convineed that they could "take care of themselves" and build up their country. There is no doubt of it left when, with over eighty million people in the United States, St. Louis in one year of its twentieth century growth has spont over $29,000,000 for new buildings. This is several millions in cash more than the total almount of each in the United States, St. Louis in one $27,000,000 in 1810, but in that year St. Louis certainly did not have one dollar in the bousand of the total Yet its prophets had already begun to feel almost as well as sured of greatness in 1809 as we are now. They expected to take care of the future.

In this century of St. Louis history the world has grown and changed almost as greatly as St. Louis and the United States have done. In modern As in 1809 St. Louis had less than

In this century of St. Louis history the world has grown and changed almost as greatly as St. Louis and the United States have done. In modern business, a single Broadway block, as the centennial pageants will pass its "skyscrapers," with the St. Louis clearing house in the upper story of one of them, certainly reaches more people than there were in the entire. 'English speaking world' and French-speaking world combined in 1809, when St. Louis as a French village was taking its first most process.
